

RAILROADERS MUST PAY FARE OR WALK

Lines West of Mountains Will Not Haul Many on Passes to the Panama Exposition.

MANY THOUSANDS AFFECTED Roads Say They Will Handle Those Ordinarily Entitled to Annual Passes, but Not Ordinary Employees and Families.

Railroad employees all over the United States have been figuring on going to one, or both of the Pacific coast expositions next year. However, if plans contemplated by the railroads and likely to be matured as talked at this time are maintained, the chances are that they will pay their fare or walk.

In the past it has been the custom to give railroad employees transportation to about any place that they might want to visit. What has been the rule with reference to employees has applied in the case of families of such employees and others dependent upon them for support.

It is asserted among railroad men that the Central, Southern, Western, Northern Pacific, Great Northern and Santa Fe roads, all reaching Pacific coast points have indicated that they are not going to do any great amount of free hauling or even railroad people next year and if the rank and file of railroad employees want to see the expositions, they will have to pay railroad fare just the same as other people.

No Free Rides West. It is probable that the Union Pacific will give its employees transportation as far as Ogden, the Burlington, Rock Island and the Missouri Pacific, as far as Denver, but from these points, on west, there will be no free rides. It is possible that a half rate may be made, but there is no certainty even of this.

It is asserted that the railroad passenger officials figure that if they give transportation to railroad employees for the round trip, it would mean that not less than 150,000 to 200,000 people would be carried free, and that this would be a tax that would not be justified under the circumstances.
